Then its snowy threads begin to burst from the boll, but are held securely in place by the okra-like thorns or points that line the boll.
One inexperienced picker can easily gather 800 pounds a day, and fast hands much more. Were the only saving that of labor in gathering the lint, the result of Mr. Subers's experiment would entitle him to the everlasting gratitude of the southern farmer. But this is not all—there are no seeds in the lint. Each boll produces about two pounds of very long staple cotton, superior to the Sea Island, and at the bottom of the boll there are from four to six seeds, resembling persimmon-seed. This new cotton, therefore, needs no gin-

After throwing out everything to keep up, hoping to strike a cur-rent that would carry her back over the rent that would carry her back over the land, she saw a tug on the lake apparently following her. She then opened the valve and came down into the water about seven miles from land clinging to the balloon. She was dragged through the water several miles, and was finally picked up in a very exhausted condition by a tug, which was on the lake with an excursion party about seventeen miles west of this city. She was in the water nearly an hour.
